But as many mothers can attest, the reality of raising children is far from straightforward. Tetyana encountered numerous challenges, from sleepless nights and temper tantrums to juggling multiple responsibilities and finding time for herself.

The Ups and Downs

The journey of motherhood is a rollercoaster ride, with delicious highs and trying lows. Tetyana recounts the difficult moments she faced, particularly during her children's early years.

"There were days when I questioned myself, whether I was doing enough for my kids. The guilt would creep in, and I'd wonder if I was failing them in some way," she admits.

But through it all, Tetyana relentlessly persevered, drawing strength from the love she has for her children. She quickly learned that motherhood is not about achieving perfection but rather about learning from mistakes and growing alongside her children.

A Journey of Self-Discovery

Beyond the challenges, Tetyana highlights the multifaceted nature of motherhood as a catalyst for personal growth and self-discovery.

"Becoming a mother allowed me to see parts of myself that I hadn't explored before. It pushed me out of my comfort zone and forced me to confront my fears and insecurities," she explains.

Through the process of nurturing her children, Tetyana discovered her own strengths and weaknesses, learning to embrace vulnerability and trusting her instincts. Motherhood, as she describes it, is an ongoing journey of self-improvement and self-rediscovery.

The Power of Unconditional Love

When asked what she believes is the most significant lesson she has learned through motherhood, Tetyana's answer is unequivocal: the power of unconditional love.

"The love I have for my children is boundless, relentless, and truly unconditional. It has taught me the importance of acceptance and forgiveness, not only toward them but toward myself as well," Tetyana shares.

She believes that this love is the driving force behind her ability to navigate the challenges of parenthood and find resilience during difficult times. It is a constant reminder that, at the core of motherhood, lies an unbreakable bond that shapes the lives of both the children and the mothers.

Celebrating Motherhood

As our conversation draws to a close, Tetyana leaves us with a poignant message: to celebrate motherhood in all its forms.

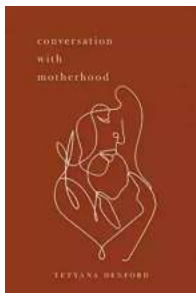

"Motherhood should be cherished and appreciated, whether you are a biological mother, a stepmother, or someone who has chosen to nurture and guide a child. It is a journey that deserves recognition and admiration," Tetyana emphasizes.

She encourages all mothers, regardless of their unique circumstances, to cultivate a supportive network where they can seek guidance, share experiences, and find solace in knowing that they are not alone.

I really don't know what I'm doing, I said.

Well, the mother replied, the thing that you will feel (but never understand),is that mothering someone is like standing in shifting sands, watching the sea.

You come to the edge, and you let it touch a part of you, and then you mourn the tide as it slips away, silently watching as it takes new shapes, and comes back to you. So you promise to stay.

In this second book in a series of themed 'Conversation' books, we see how destabilizing and human motherhood is, but also how wonderfully ordinary it is too. Normalize revealing how complicated it is to talk about motherhood, and how little time we give ourselves to take the time to understand our part in it. Because motherhood and womanhood are linked in a marriage that's strange and wonderful and heartbreaking and captivating and soul-destroying and lonely and exhausting and it will upend your serenity and make you question who you are every single day.

And that's okay.

In "Conversation With Motherhood", Tetyana tries to talk about the complications and nuances women experience when they choose to have children, even mother other people's children. These are universal narratives, without labels or stereotypes, without judge or jury, and without trendy explanations. It's the honest and true parts of ourselves that even we find hard to understand. But we try, and we talk, and we keep mothering. Tetyana's writing has been called "haunting", "bold and lyrical", "completely heartbreaking", and a beautiful study of connection, humanity, and how we can all learn from each other's stories."
