Village children in the High Alps confront evil with goodness in a battle for the soul of a country.

The edict that all Jews must wear yellow patches to single them out for derision is cunningly thwarted by the villagers of Mittelammergau in the German Alps.

"If patches are the law, then all will wear patches," declared village leaders. "There will be patches for Jews and for Christians. For commendable characteristics and behavior. All will wear many patches."

When a furious Adolph Hitler leads Nazi storm troopers to Mittelammergau to round up the villagers for transport to Dachau, the children stand up to the madman--at the risk of their lives.

Innocently, they do not understand that they are confronting a monster.
