Intense drama based on real events. One woman's search for unconditional love and lasting happiness, her intimate story of exciting victories and crushing defeats.

Little Tania didn't have a very good start in life. She was born in post-war Russia and was abandoned by her parents in Moscow hospital. Then she was raised by her uncaring grandma in Kiev, but had to carry the curse and the sins of her dysfunctional family for many years. Raised in deep poverty, abuse, hatred, guilt and shame, and being haunted by her childhood memories she couldn't keep healthy relationship with men. After the attempt to commit suicide and becoming a single mum she fell into deep clinical depression.

At the age of 42 she entered the market of Russian brides as a last resort. Very soon she married an Englishman, but when she and her son arrived to Britain to start a new life, her newlywed husband changed his mind and asked her to go back to Ukraine. Being totally devastated she packed her modest belongings and stepped out to a totally unfamiliar territory. Will she survive on her own in a foreign country and find true love and happiness? Or will she crumble again under the unforeseen circumstances? Will she find unconditional love she always wanted?

The author uses her own negative life experiences to show the process of self-healing and self-love. How can you go from being “devastated, depressed, angry and lost” to being “fully alive, joyful, peaceful and wise”? Unhappy memories and family legacy do not have to control our today’s reality. Can we erase them and flourish to the best of our potential?
