Eve LaTourneau needed to get some space. A failed marriage, a waning career, she needed to discover her passion and have some adventures. A writer and journalist from Montreal, Canada, her experiences were limited to the city she had grown up in. She had married her high-school sweetheart who only wanted her to stay at home and have babies. But Eve wanted more...she wanted adventure, she wanted to see the world, but most of all, she wanted to bring news stories to the world. Worthy news stories. Things that made a difference.

In the first series 'Fine Print', Eve decides to get away and rediscover herself while working on her first manuscript. She rents a beach house on the Gulf of Mexico where she can be close to nature and far, far away from her past life. When a chance encounter occurs on the beach near the cabin that Eve has rented, she is amazed to discover that she can be adventurous and liberated. An unquenchable steamy relationship begins with a man she does not even know! As an investigative reporter, Eve stumbles on another mystery, right in her own rented home, and is forced to channel her strength and beat back her desire to try to survive her escapade.

After her traumatic sabbatical in Brownsville, Texas, Eve moves to Victoria, BC to ramp up her journalism career and is given a foreign assignment in the second series 'An African Affair' where she travels to Zimbabwe, Africa where she will report on poaching. She is to stay at a compound out in the middle of the African plains for six months. A no-nonsense hard-working older man, Graeme Van der Merwe, who runs the compound is a former Environmental Biologist who has dedicated his life to saving the African wildlife. Although Eve has sworn off men and is focusing on her career as an investigative reporter, there is something about this man who is old enough to be her father.

Terrifying encounters with poachers and wild animals bring the two people from totally different worlds closer together, as their attraction for one another grows. Will Eve have the strength to resist her desires for this handsome older man, or will she launch an affair? An African Affair.

The third series 'Jamais et Toujours' starts on Eve's return flight to Canada, she reflects on the tragedy in her life. The first man she did not love, but at least he could find love for himself; the second man was a scoundrel criminal who couldn't love anyone; and now, when Eve thought she had found her soulmate, he is taken from her. Maybe she was just not made for love.

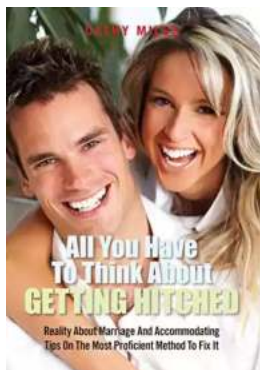

After returning from Africa, Eve is devastated. Eve takes the role of lead anchor at the network, with the agreement that she can be the lead reporter on any breaking stories she finds interesting, to keep her fingers in the pie, so to speak. She cuts her hair to a shoulder length bob and trades in her jeans, Hennessy button downs, and cute sundresses for well-fitting suits and patent leather pumps. Her coworkers begin to think of her as 'that bitch', except for her one friend, Carl, who tries to get Eve out of her slump. She is not messing around - everything is about business, her reputation, and reporting the news – there is nothing else.

In this third series in the Eve LaTourneau Journey, Jamais et Toujours, we are introduced to Shawn McGuire, a self-centered, egotistical, outdoorsy type who does not believe that anyone can have a passion for the environment and earth like he does. This extremely hot and fit runner is on a mission. He has a story that he has uncovered in Venezuela, but he needs an investigative reporter to help him reveal the truth and bring the story back to the world. Eve joins his mission, but is annoyed by his ego and arrogance, although entranced by his good looks and surprising moments of kindness. Her emotions are in a turmoil. No matter how hard Shawn hits on her, Eve pushes him away.

Now they are stuck together in the jungle, does jamais really mean never? Does it have to be this way, toujours?
